Will You?" (Op-Ed, Nov. 11), Senator Bill Bradley argues that we need radical campaign finance reform for people to "start taking their democracy back from the power of money." However, trying to more tightly control spending by those who contribute too much money to their causes and candidates will not fix what ails our government. America's central governance problem is that longstanding constitutional constraints limiting government power have been eroded, so that it has turned from protecting the property rights of its citizens to being a violator of those rights on behalf of political supporters.
